She considers her family "a little crazy," but this Louisiana lady seems to have her head screwed on right. After graduation she intends to open her own boutique, then stock it with clothes of her own design. She's drawn to men with muscles, great smiles, dark hair and dark eyes—as long as "they don't think they look better than I do!" Her motto? "There's nothing bad from which good cannot come."

It took about a nanosecond for an alert staffer to notice that the girl working in the office next door was, well, a perfect girl next door. Recruited as an intern in Playboy's Art Department, Jennifer agreed to expand her job responsibilities by taking some test shots. The performance review was excellent, and she was quickly promoted to our Website as a November '02 Cyber Girl of the Week. "This has been the most fabulous experience of my life—both as an intern and a model. What an exciting year!"

She might use her degree to pursue a career in international relations, but then again she may decide to work toward a Nobel Prize in physics, join the Peace Corps or head up a government agency that distributes aid—or even become an astronaut. But don't mistake her buckshot approach to job choices as flightiness. "I'm still learning things every day, and my curiosity and willingness to contribute keep me motivated to find the perfect fit."

Time to head for the cold showers, guys: Stacy rarely dates. She prefers to spend her leisure time learning to play bass guitar or dealing 'em down and dirty at her regular Monday-night poker game. But if "a hottie with charisma" looks her way, she'll royally flush and ante up the charm. Best bet to win big: "Make me feel like a complete princess. Flattery will get you everywhere!"

All it takes is dark hair, a nice smile and a love of music for a guy to stand a reasonable chance of qualifying as dating material. But marriage and "making beautiful babies" is an eventual goal, and to fill that role a potential mate must have a willingness to be her best friend but not an obsessive need to be with her 24/7. "I like time to hang with my girlfriends, paint my nails—and play softball!" Take cheer, sports fans—she also likes watching football, driving muscle cars and making out.

"I was a goofy little kid, sort of a nerd. I always had my head in the books." That solitary pursuit paid off—she's matured into a "smart, persistent and positive" adult who sets and meets goals. Next up: to own a boutique and design her own line of clothes. Marriage and kids are also on the agenda, and she sees no reason why she can't successfully combine a career with a family. But first she has to find an intelligent, focused, funny guy with great eyes and sexy lips.

Her practical nature sees a future in pharmaceuticals, but her daring, go-for-broke side fantasizes about performing in a strip club for a week. "But only if nobody I know sees me!" Posing for us was the next best thing—"an incredibly sensual experience!"—and even provided a little of the tease she craves. "We were shooting on the banks of an intercoastal waterway when a boat full of guys came by and honked. I gave them a big smile—and then ran inside!"

Her career goals are still a little vague, but "winning the lottery would help alleviate decision anxiety." She's much clearer about her taste in men.

Potential matches must be the "tall, strong and silent type." Short, hairy, obnoxious guys face immediate disqualification. So how will she know she's met Mr. Right? "When I stop using my vibrator."

Her most significant personal accomplishment to date is "moving away from a pleasantly dysfunctional family to a pleasantly dysfunctional solo life." But earning her law degree and passing the bar will inflate her bragging rights—and give her enough cash to buy "every pair of hot shoes I see." What does she think people say behind her back? "Hey, nice shoes!"

"I'm a caring person who will stop at nothing to please the people I love. But I also know what I want out of life, and nothing will prevent me from reaching my goals." ✶ As far as I know, wearing shoes disqualifies one from being called "barefoot." Yet Barefoot Beauties includes many shots of shod women. Why? What's next—NUDES with fully-clad models? ...C.J.

Would the Mona Lisa look as good without a frame? The Pietà without a pedestal? Some foot fanciers like the digits accessorized, some prefer them unadorned, so we tried to be, um, even-footed in our presentation.

✶ What I liked about the old Playboy days was that the models wore more clothes, showed less skin and displayed a sense of grace and sophistication. Please consider a new series dressing up today's women as you did in the Fifties and Sixties. ...C.d'A.

✶ Susan Henson represents the all-American girl-next-door. She's all natural and perfect in every way—from her pretty smile to her gorgeous bod. Susan is perfect Playmate material. ...J.S.

✶ I just bought NUDES and wanted to tell you how good I thought Krista Ayne looked. Even though she pulls off the detached look very well, her smile makes you imagine the contagious laughter that must come with it. She and your photographer really showed how nudes can be art. Thanks. ...D.F.

✶ Jamie Button is an exceptional beauty, lovely beyond words. I was awestruck by her captivating beauty. In my opinion, she's a budding Playboy star. ...D.D.

✶ In my younger days whenever I saw a beautiful woman I would utter a quiet "thank you" under my breath to the good Lord for creating such loveliness. Today, as an ordained minister, I don't thank the Creator as much as I do Playboy for presenting the best of female beauty in such a tasteful package. Your models are some of the most heavenly beings mine eyes have ever seen. I wholeheartedly support the more explicit direction, and I'm confident that we will continue to enjoy the usual graces of amazing beauties. May the practice and spirit of Playboy be everlasting—lest I lose faith and go astray. ...Rev. B.D.T.
